THE CALIFORNIA NATIONAL GUARD

THE WORLD WAR

1917 - 1919

During the World War the California National Guard and the Naval Militia of California formed a valuable force in the following pages an attempt is made to give a brief history of these organizations.

ACTIVITIES OF

DURING

THE WORLD WAR

1917-1919

On the twenty-fourth of March, 1917, at 1:30 in the afternoon, the unarmed British steamer Lusitania, carrying 195 passengers and crew, among whom were a number of American citizens, was sunk by a German submarine while crossing the English Channel from New York to Liverpool. The Lusitania had never been armed; was a vessel known to be used only for the conveyance of passengers and was not following the route taken by troop or supply ships. About thirty of her passengers, non-combatants of all ages and sexes, including citizens of the United States were killed or injured.

On April 18, 1918, President Wilson dispatched a note to the German Emperor, German Minister of Foreign Affairs, requesting the German Government immediately declare and effect an abandonment of its policy of warfare against passenger and freight carrying vessels. Failure to comply with this request would leave the United States no choice but to sever diplomatic relations with Germany altogether.

The German Minister, in his reply to Wilson's note, June 4, 1918, stated that an investigation of the Lusitania case was being made, and that he was not at all prepared to accept the facts, he did not believe the submarine was in violation of international law, he would not further discuss the matter.

THE CALIFORNIA NATIONAL GUARD

AND THE WORLD WAR

1917 - 1919

During the World War the California National Guard and the Naval Militia of California formed a valuable part of the National Army. In the following pages an attempt is made to accurately record the activities of these organizations.

On the twenty-fourth of March, 1916, at about 2:50 in the afternoon, the unarmed British steamer Sussex with 325 passengers on board, among whom were a number of American citizens, was torpedoed by a German submarine while crossing the English Channel from Folkestone to Dieppe. The Sussex had never been armed; was a vessel known to be habitually used only for the conveyance of passengers and was not following the route taken by troop or supply ships. About eighty of her passengers, noncombatants of all ages and sexes, including citizens of the United States were killed or injured.

On April 18, 1916, President Wilson dispatched a note to Gottlieb Von Jagow, German Minister of Foreign Affairs, requesting the German Government to immediately declare and effect an abandonment of its' methods of warfare against passenger and freight carrying vessels. Failure to comply with this request would leave the United States no choice but to sever diplomatic relations with Germany altogether.

The German Minister, in his reply to President Wilson's note, on May 4, 1916, stated that an investigation of the sinking of the Sussex was being made, and while he was not as yet in full possession of all the facts, he did not believe the submarine commander entirely to blame. However, to avoid any further misunderstanding he had sent the following order to all submarine commanders: "In accordance with the general principles of visit and search and the destruction of merchant vessels recognized by international law, such vessels, both within and without the area declared a naval war zone, shall not be destroyed without warning nor without effort to save human lives unless the ship attempts to escape or offers resistance."

2-8-50 MS

The German Government maintained that policy until January 31, 1917, when a declaration was issued stating that on and after February 1, 1917, the said German Government would conduct an unrestricted submarine warfare within the following boundaries: A line running from practically the center of the Netherland coast northward blockading all of Denmark and the entrance to the Baltic Sea to the outside point of Norway; thence due west skirting the southern part of the Faroe Islands; thence west and south in a grand square 300 to 400 miles to sea off the British Isles to the point where the boundary line between Spain and Portugal touches the Atlantic Ocean, apparently leaving the latter country open and affording a 20 mile safety zone along the northern coast of Spain to the French border. Practically the whole Mediterranean was declared dangerous except a narrow strip almost paralleling the African coast to a point directly south of Greece, from which a 20 mile path to Greek territorial waters was declared open. All ships found within this restricted area were to be sunk without warning.

This German note called forth a general protest from all neutrals. The protest from the United States was, however, the most emphatic in tone; because the position reverted at once to the ultimatum of 1916, in which this country had frankly stated her position if the submarine attacks were continued.

On February 3, 1917, the United States broke off diplomatic relations with Germany. Such action was a direct threat of war. The German leaders, while professing a desire to please and satisfy, knew secretly that they meant to persist in their submarine warfare, so they planned to involve America in trouble at home, hoping thus to keep her out of Europe. Germany's greatest effort of the kind was an attempt by Zimmermann, newly appointed German Minister of Foreign Affairs, to rouse Mexico and Japan to war against the United States. The note urging this was intercepted by the United States Secret Service and was promptly made public to the American people.

Pursuant to telegraphic orders from the Secretary of War calling the California National Guard into Federal Service, Governor William D. Stephens, on March 26, 1917, ordered the organizations of the Second, Fifth, and Seventh Infantry Regiments to assemble at their armories and begin recruiting.

On April 2, 1917, the President of the United States proclaimed the Necessity of war and on April 6, Congress in solemn session and with practical unanimity voted for the declaration of war against the Imperial German Government.

On the same day, April 6, Headquarters and the First, Second, Third, Fourth, Fifth, Sixth, Seventh, Eighth, Ninth, Tenth, and Eleventh Divisions, First and Second Engineer Divisions, First Marine Company, Aeronautic Section Ninth Division, Engineer Section Fourth Division, and Medical Department, California Naval Militia were called into Federal Service.

Six days later, on April twelfth, the Fifth and Eighth Companies, Coast Artillery of the First Coast Defense Command and the Thirteenth, Fourteenth, Fifteenth, and Eighteenth Companies Coast Artillery of the Second Coast Defense Command were called into Federal Service.

Companies A and B, First Battalion of Engineers were called into Federal Service on June 20th, and July 10, 1917, respectively. Headquarters and Batteries A, B, and C, First Battalion of Field Artillery were called into Federal Service June 22, 1917.

The remaining organizations of the California National Guard consisting of Headquarters First Brigade, Medical, Dental, and Veterinary Corps; Company C, First Battalion of Engineers Company B, Signal Corps; First and Second Field Hospital Companies; First and Second Ambulance, Companies; Headquarters and Troops A, B, C, and D, and Machine-Gun Troop, First Squadron of Cavalry; First Regiment of Field Artillery less Headquarters and Batteries A, B, and C, previously called out; Headquarters and First, Second, Third, Fourth, Sixth, Seventh, Ninth, Tenth, Eleventh, and Twelfth Companies Coast Artillery, First Coast Defense Command; Headquarters, and Sixteenth, Seventeenth, Nineteenth, Twentieth, Twenty-first, Twenty-second, Twenty-third, and Twenty-fourth Companies, Coast Artillery, Second Coast Defense Command, together with the National Guard organizations previously called into active service were drafted into the Federal Service on August 5, 1917, by proclamation of the President, dated July 3, 1917. The total number of officers and enlisted men of the California National Guard and Naval Militia drafted into Federal Service August 5, 1917, was 11, 581.

The California Naval Militia was mobilized aboard the U.S.S. Oregon, U.S.S. San Diego, and U.S.S. Huntington at Mare Island, California and it was mustered into Federal Service as National Naval Volunteers, May 1, 1917. The officers and men were assigned to duty on vessels of the Pacific Fleet, under orders to proceed to the Atlantic Coast, also to other duties aboard ship and ashore, and they saw service in all parts of the world.

The Second, Fifth, and Seventh Infantry Regiments were divided into detachments and placed on duty guarding railroad bridges, tunnels, and munition plants in California, Nevada, and Utah from the Mexican border on the south, as far north as Utah.

To carry out the provisions of the act of Congress of June 3, 1916, the Militia Bureau was confronted with the problem of arranging for a proper scheme for the organization of the existing National Guard forces of the States, including those that might be expected to exist when the maximum of eight hundred men per United States Congressman was attained. It was decided to make divisional areas coincide approximately with the sixteen National Army training areas, although the latter were based upon population, whereas the National Guard strength was based upon representation in Congress. The proper allotment of men to each divisional area and State was finally determined and published as an inclosure with Circular Letter, Militia Bureau of May 5, 1917. This inclosure, in addition, enumerated organizations that were assigned to each State and included in its existing units. This was done to enable State authorities to be organizing, according to a definite plan, the additional units not already in existence in their State, whenever they felt able to do so, thus gradually building up the tactical divisional organization.

The active entry of the United States into the War necessitating the dispatch of troops overseas still further complicated the matter of organization of the National Guard, in that a complete reorganization must be effected. A division under the new organization comprised the following units: Division Headquarters; Machine-Gun Battalion and four companies; two infantry brigades, each consisting of machine-gun battalion and two infantry regiments; Field Artillery brigade, three regiments; Trench Mortar battery; one regiment Coast Artillery; one Field Signal battalion; Headquarters Military Police; Ammunition train; Supply train; Sanitary train; and Engineer train.

In September, 1917, the 40th Division, composed of National Guard units of California, Arizona, Colorado, Utah, and New Mexico was organized, placed under command of Major-General Frederick S. Strong and trained at Camp Kearney, California. The California National Guard underwent several changes and redesignations as follows:

Second Infantry: Companies A, B, C, D, I, and K were redesignated as Companies I, K, L, and M, 159th Infantry, 40th Division; Companies E, F, G, H, L, and M were redesignated as Companies E, F, G, and H, 160th Infantry, 40th Division.

The entire Fifth Infantry was redesignated 159th Infantry, 40 Division and the Seventh Infantry was redesignated 160th Infantry, 40th Division. The First Squadron of Cavalry, Troops A, B, and C, and Machine-Gun Troop became the 145th Machine-Gun Battalion, and Troops D became Headquarters Troop of the 40th Division. First Regiment of Field Artillery was redesignated 143d Regiment of Field Artillery and Second Regiment of Field Artillery was redesignated 144th Regiment, Field Artillery. Company B, Signal Corps became Company A, 115th Field Signal Battalion; Ambulance Companies one and two became 157th and 158th Ambulance Companies, 115th Sanitary Train. Field Hospitals one and two became 157th and 158th Field Hospital Companies, 115th Sanitary Train. The only immediate change in the two regiments of Coast Artillery was a redesignation in the numerical order of the companies. Later on, some of the companies were transferred to various regiments of heavy artillery. The First Battalion of California Engineers was attached to the 42nd Division as the 117th Engineer Regiment. The 42nd Division later became a combat division.

On July 26, 1918, Headquarters and Headquarters Troop, followed by the different units, entrained for overseas duty, the entire 40th Division arriving in France during the month of August, 1918, where it became the Sixth Depot Division or replacement division. As a unit the 40th Division saw no active service at the front but its officers, and men formed part of the First, Second, Third, Twenty-sixth, Seventy-seventh, and Seventy-ninth Divisions at St. Mihiel and in the Argonne. On September 20, 1918, a few days before the Meuse-Argonne drive an order reached the 40th Division Headquarters for five thousand infantry replacements, including officers, to be sent to combat divisions at the front. Of that number, Two thousand five hundred were taken from the 159th and 160th Regiments. The five thousand officers and men of the 40th Division became part of the 77th Infantry Division during the Meuse-Argonne drive, and One Hundred men of Company G, 160th Infantry were in the famous "Lost Battalion."

All units of the California National Guard that engaged in active service were present at the two major offensives, the St. Mihiel and Meuse-Argonne. With the signing of the Armistice on November 11, 1918, the units of the 40th Division returned to California and were discharged at Camp Kearney and at the Presidio of San Francisco, their services being no longer required. The last unit of the National Guard, Company A, 115th Field Signal Battalion was demobilized July 16, 1919.

On February 18, 1918, the Regiment marched to Langres and entrained there for Moyon, where they arrived February 20th. From Moyon the troops marched to Habai ville, and from that point, on the 22nd of February, were sent to the front line, under French command and attached to the 167th French Infantry. The Battalion left Vacquerville for the rear on June 18, 1918, and marched to St. Benoit, thence to St. Helene, and from there to Thaon, where the troops entrained June 24th, arrived at Coolus, June 25th, thence marched twenty-two kilometers to Hablaincourt.* On June 28th, the Battalion marched to L'Peine and on July 4th, was called into the front line at Suippes to make preparations for a counter to a pending German attack. The Battalion was to act as reserve infantry with the 84th Brigade. On July 15th, 1918 the Regiment moved to the vicinity of Jonchrey Farm to relieve the 165th New York Infantry. They moved from that position on July 18th, and arrived at Cuperly the 19th, remaining there until July 23d, when the troops entrained for the vicinity of Chateau Thierry.
